

Exciting New Venture?

It's one question we've all been asking since lockdown began... How do we plan for the future when everything seems uncertain? Here at the theatre, the answer is in the old adage: prepare for the worst and hope for the best! In doing so, we're working on a few exciting new ventures...

The first marks the start of a new season at the theatre. Starting in October, we're going to move forward with a project called New Virtual Theatre. Performed in the theatre and viewed from the comfort of home, the season is set to begin with a series of three short plays. Each of these makes the most of social-distancing guidelines: small casts, minimal dressing and intimate staging...

With luck, this rolling, three-month season provides the artistic and creative outlet we need before we reopen our doors in a more traditional way. For these productions, we'll be working with some of the actors and directors that missed out because of lockdown. So... Keep your eyes peeled: in early August, we plan to announce more details!

In the meanwhile, if you're a member and you're interested in recording a monologue as part of a smaller project, look out for the next email, titled: Want to Act Again? This has details of how we plan to get creative in the next couple of weeks...
